

serving size counts!

- A “portion” of a food or beverage is the amount you choose to eat or drink. That’s different from the “serving size” listed on a nutrition label.
- When you read the nutrition label, remember that the calories listed are for “one serving,” which may be less than the whole package or bottle.
- Portions at home and in restaurants have gotten bigger over time. Sodas are now 20 fluid ounces instead of 8 or 10 fluid ounces.
- At restaurants, share a main dish or cut a large portion in half and take the rest home.
- At home, serve portions that are the sizes shown below.

Here’s What Sensible Servings Look Like

1 ounce of cheese=
a pair of dice

1 teaspoon butter
or margarine =
postage stamp

3 ounces of cooked fish = checkbook

2 tablespoons of peanut butter =
pingpong ball

2-3 ounces of cooked meat=
deck of cards

1/2 cup noodles or rice=
closed woman’s fist

IDEAL FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY
Splenda.
NO CALORIE SWEETENER

©2006 McNeil Nutritionals, LLC